INSTITUT DE RECHERCHE DES NATIONS UNIES POUR LE DÉVELOPPEMENT SOCIAL

L'Institut de recherche des Nations Unies pour le développement social (UNRISD) est une institution autonome qui entreprend des recherches multidisciplinaires sur les dimensions sociales de problèmes contemporains ayant une incidence sur le développement. Il est guidé dans son travail par la conviction qu'il est indispensable, pour définir des politiques de développement efficaces, de bien comprendre le contexte social et politique. L'Institut tente donc de donner aux gouvernements, aux organismes de développement, aux organisations de base et aux universitaires, les moyens de mieux comprendre comment les politiques de développement et les changements d'ordre économique, social et environnemental affectent divers groupes sociaux. Travaillant au travers d'un vaste réseau de centres de recherche nationaux, l'UNRISD vise à encourager une recherche originale et à renforcer la capacité de recherche des pays en développement. Ses recherches actuelles portent notamment sur les thèmes suivants: Société civile et mouvements sociaux; Démocratie, gouvernance et droits de l'homme; Identités, conflit et cohésion; Politique sociale et développement; Technologie, entreprises et société.
